Speed vs. Technique?

Coach Dave Tonnesen is co-owner and co-founder of SwimKids, an ASCA Level 4 Coach, a 13 year USA Swimming Head Coach, former 6-season undefeated High School Coach of the Year, and serves on the Board of Directors of the U.S. Swim School Association.

"Oooooohhhh! Look at that swimmer they make it look so easy, and they are so fast! What team do they swim with?"

Just like the Olympics, we love to watch athletes that make fast swimming appear almost effortless. How do they do it? And more importantly, how can my swimmer drop 3 seconds so they can be on the relay?

Well, the good news is that fast swimming is not magical, and when done right, fast swimming can look so beautiful that it appears almost effortless. So, what's more important: speed or technique?

The answer is, technique first and then speed, because water is roughly 1,000 times denser than air. In fact, if you fire a bullet in the water, it will slow down to a speed that would not harm you at 6-8 feet depending on the weapon. In plain terms, that means for every unit of speed that your swimmer gains, they get a penalty of 4 units of drag to go along with their speed. In swimming, it is crucial to have great technique so that your swimmer can reduce the drag before they focus on speed and endurance. For more details and the full article on speed vs. technique, visit www.swimkids.us/stealth-swimming and look for the article, "Speed Vs. Technique?".

Finding a Great Swim Team

"So, now that I know that technique instruction is much more important than just swimming laps, how do I know what year-round team is best for my swimmer?" The answer is: it depends! It depends on what you and your swimmer are looking for in a team. To find the best team for your family, you must consider your swimmer's goals, your family's lifestyle and time commitment, your swimmer's time commitment and other activities, team philosophy, the coaching system that your swimmer will be in, convenience, cost, travel, etc. For a quick worksheet to help you ask the right questions and know how to find the best fit for your swimmer and family, visit www.swimkids.us/stealth-swimming and select "Choosing a Swim Team".

While we wish we had more space here to go into more depth on these and so many other great topics, we invite you to visit www.swimkids.us/stealth-swimming for more.
